SLEEP: JOURNAL CLUB REVIEW

Written by SRS trainee members, these short commentaries review recently published papers in the journal SLEEP.

CAREER OPPORTUNITIES

UNIVERSITY OF PITTSBURGH

T32 training program, “Translational Research Training in Sleep and Circadian Science” currently has openings available for post-doctoral and predoctoral scholars. The program is funded by T32 HL082610, currently in its 16th year of funding. They have an outstanding record of success in helping trainees transition into faculty and post-doc appointments, career development awards, and independent research funding. They are particularly interested in young scientists who come from backgrounds underrepresented in science.

Interested trainees can find out more at www.sleep.pitt.edu or email willrichl@upmc.edu

HARVARD MEDICAL SCHOOL

The Research Training Program in Sleep, Circadian and Respiratory Neurobiology, is offering pre- and postdoctoral fellowships positions. This program is supported by a grant to the Brigham and Women’s Hospital from the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute for U.S. citizens and permanent residents. Applications are reviewed quarterly. The training program provides a competitive stipend and an allotment for travel and training related expenses. They are committed to diversity, equity and inclusion and strongly encourage applications from women, and from persons from racial and ethnic groups that are underrepresented in STEM fields, persons with disabilities, and individuals from disadvantaged backgrounds.

CLEVELAND CLINIC

The Cleveland Clinic Sleep Disorders Center of the Neurologic Institute is seeking an early career Sleep Medicine Scientist (MD/DO or PhD) for the Clinician Scientist track focused on investigation of pathophysiology and impact of sleep and/or circadian rhythm disorders in health and disease. A variety of resources are available including a biospecimen repository, large registry of structured and unstructured sleep physiologic data, data scientist/biostatistical team and established research administrative infrastructure. Opportunities are available for cross-cutting team science initiatives leveraging the strengths of our scientific program including data science/artificial intelligence initiatives, study of the intersection of sleep and circadian disruption in neurologic and cardiopulmonary disease, elucidating sleep health disparities and characterizing inflammation and the microbiome in hypersomnia disorders as exemplars. Our center is committed to training the next generation of sleep scientists with institution of mentored career paths.

RESEARCH OPPORTUNITIES

NATIONAL SLEEP RESEARCH RESOURCE

The National Sleep Research Resource (NSRR; www.sleepdata.org) is a NHLBI-supported collection of de-identified physiological signals (polysomnography, actigraphy) and clinical data from multiple cohorts and clinical trials available to sleep researchers and trainees. The Resource is designed to support secondary data analysis, hypothesis generation, algorithmic development, signal processing and more. Many data elements are harmonized across cohorts and open-source tools are available to support signal processing. Register for the upcoming NSRR Webinar Series to learn more about accessing and sharing data through this NHLBI sleep data repository and how NSRR can assist researchers meet the new NIH Data Management and Sharing Policy. Contact support@sleepdata.org for questions.

National Sleep Research Resource (NSRR) Webinar Series

Join the Advancing Sleep Research Through Data Sharing to learn about how NSRR can help with your research and data management, and how NSRR can assist with meeting the new NIH Data Management & Sharing Policy, which becomes effective January 25, 2023. These webinars are free and open to all, however, registration is required.
